

Promotion Campaigns Analysis

Asics Campaigns:

1. Zen Approach to Movement (2024):

- The campaign invites all ages and abilities to embrace the joy of movement.
- Impact on Nike: This campaign could pose a threat to Nike by promoting a holistic view of movement that may resonate with consumers looking for more than just physical performance.

2. Move Your Mind 2024:

- Focuses on various activities like running, jumping, and walking to promote movement.
- Impact on Nike: This campaign could attract consumers looking for technology-driven solutions for both physical and mental well-being.

3. OneASICS™ Promotional Terms:

- Offers a discount promotion for OneASICS™ members.
- Impact on Nike: This promotion could lure customers away from Nike by offering better deals and incentives.

Adidas Campaigns:

1. We All Need Someone to Make Us Believe You Got This (2025):

- Aims to motivate positivity and influence on the pitch, track, and court.
- Impact on Nike: This campaign may create a positive brand image for Adidas, potentially drawing consumers seeking motivation and support in their athletic pursuits.

2. Adidas 'You Got This' Sideline Pressures:

- Addresses high-pressure sideline environments in sports.

- Impact on Nike: This campaign could resonate with athletes and fans who face pressure, positioning Adidas as a brand that understands and supports them.

3. Adidas Originals' 'The Original' Campaign:

- Focuses on individuality through specific apparel and footwear.
- Impact on Nike: This campaign may attract consumers looking for unique and original sportswear options, potentially challenging Nike's market dominance in this aspect.

Overall Impact on Nike:

- Asics and Adidas both have strong promotion campaigns that focus on diverse aspects of movement, positivity, and individuality. These campaigns could impact Nike by appealing to different consumer segments and emphasizing values that might sway consumers towards their brands. Nike's response to these innovative and holistic campaigns will be crucial in maintaining its competitive edge in the sportswear market.